

International Conference on Biomass-Energy Technologies (ICBT2012)

October 22-24, 2012
Nanjing • China

With the development of global industrialization, the world is facing an energy crisis and increasing environmental pressures resulting from fossil energy use. In recent years biomass energy has been becoming one of the most important components of the sustainable energy systems due to its abundance and renewability. Biomass energy has attracted great interests in research, development, and technology deployment. In order to promote biomass energy research and development and information exchange, the International Conference on Biomass and Energy Technologies (ICBT2012), sponsored by the Chinese Renewable Energy Society (CRES), Chinese Academy of Forestry (CAF), The American Institute of Chemical Engineers (AIChE) and Strategic Alliance of Biomass Liquid Fuels Industry Technology Innovation will be held on October 22–24, 2012 in Nanjing, China.

The ICBT2012 aims to provide a communication and exhibition platform for researchers, developers and entrepreneurs in the biomass energy field. The anticipated participants will include not only renowned experts, researchers, and government agency people, but also company executives and professionals in project investment and development, from Asia, Europe, and the United States. During the conference the participants will discuss and exchange their ideas on novel technologies of biomass energy technologies and commercialization in order to facilitate collaborative research on biomass energy between China and other countries. The conference will provide a pathway of new development opportunities in biomass energy for researchers, developers and entrepreneurs.
